

Digital Paintings

Carolyn R. Beever

The exhibit consists of digital paintings, plus a few watercolors and photographs.

I have always believed that the computer is another media with which the artist can create works of art. As in all works of art, digital paintings are a combination of imagination, artistic ability and personal vision. The only difference is that the computer is the means with which to complete a vision.

I combine my painting background with digital photography to produce what I call “digital paintings”. On the computer, I combine and manipulate photographs, which I have taken, then use painting techniques to produce something completely new. Every “digital painting” is a combination of two or more photographs. There must be a new reality and an emotional response from me in the finished image. I think of these creations as being “beyond photography”. Hopefully my images invite the viewer to enter his or her own thoughts into this new vision.

I have always believed that the computer is another media with which the artist can create works of art. As in all works of art, digital paintings are a combination of imagination, artistic ability and personal vision. The only difference is that the computer is the means with which to complete a vision.